From the majestic silence of the ancient city of Kyoto to the pristine innovation of artistic landscapes in Oslo, Sienná has been blessed with a unique, vibrant magic that has always resided inside her, an aura that isn't just music, but rather a connection between two worlds. Sienná's career is nothing more than a perfect manifestation of a visionary in action – someone who effortlessly merges the ancient wisdom and elegance of Eastern culture with the modern innovation of Western electronic music. Amidst an industry that's so often consumed with transient trends and their poor imitations, Sienná is completely unparalleled, occupying a space that's unique only to her. The range of her musical expression is immense and breathtaking, creating amazing soundscapes in which the intellectual liberty of jazz, the majestic structure of classical composition, and the rhythmic energy of modern house music blend effortlessly into the subtle sounds of traditional and modern Japanese instruments. Every new album is an example of how she pushes the limits of electronic music, using synths and rhythm to create a personal and sensory experience. Her newest creation of hers was released on September 23rd, and it's an astonishing nine-track masterpiece entitled EMA. For those of us who have been in awe of her talent all these years, it's a masterpiece that serves as the apotheosis of her artistic path, and every melody invites us into her amazing world. Let's take a look at it together and see what this incredible album offers.

“Be A Seeker, Believer” is the first song on the album and comes alive with a vibrant, ethereal vintage futuristic heartbeat, eighties synth arpeggios glitter in an endless loop along with a deep and heavy bassline that gets locked into a buoyant and catchy groove before being overtaken by percussive sounds of electronic beats. Thematically speaking, the song serves as an inspiring manifesto of the traveling soul, dealing with the struggles of living in an unpredictable world and encouraging the listener to take care of their optimism and faith. Created around themes of resilience and self-belief, the lead single “Be A Seeker, Believer” highlights promotions for aiming to restore the hope in this beautiful but sad world. Vocals of SIENNÁ are impressively stacked with layers and range between whispered verses and multitrack harmonies. The instruments of the song include sparkling synth brass and bouncy basslines surrounding the voice of the artist and forming a lush, illuminated soundscape. The effect on the listener is immediate and full of motivating power as it drops you right into a state of euphoria and absolute certainty.

With absolutely no hesitation whatsoever, “Your Facts My Facts” explodes within the first few seconds with a powerful low-end bass synth line, crisp electronic claps, and strange dry spoken word samples which bounce around the stereo spectrum. As for the lyrical content, it presents a satirical take on the subjectiveness of truth and shows how one's own biases and ego influence his/her reality in a world that is full of contradicting views. The vocal performance combines a theatrical and straightforward conversation-style delivery which plays on the rhythmic lines of underground Electronic Dance Music (EDM). The track's powerful bass synthesis and random electronic chops make the song feel irresistibly energetic and ready for the dance floor.

As for the project, the tempo drastically drops at the opening of the title track “EMA” as it starts from a tranquil, ethereal and slowly rising wave of atmospheric synth drones, sparkling chimes, and ambient rise similar to soft breeze blowing through a sunlit forest. It is centered on the spiritual vibes and melodies of Japanese wooden votive plaques intended for praying to the God, and the lyrics become a deep introspection about cleansing the mind from chaos and sending pure thoughts to the universe. SIENNÁ treats her performance as a spiritual ritual when she surrounds her hushed and closely mic'd lead vocals with lush reverb-filled choral harmonies resembling a prayer chant. As for the instruments, they remain minimalistic when organic synths are combined with rhythmic pulses. It is really hard not to feel the state of profound stillness while listening to this song and immersing the mind into the meditative trance.

The cinematic and grand “Aenaria” kicks off with a majestic and slowly swelling sweep of a piano melody and synthetic strings that soar and flow like ocean tides over gentle and shimmering ambient textures. Inspired by the ancient Roman town of the same name that lays at the bottom of the sea near the Island of Ischia, the track employs its underwater theme to address the concepts of emotional depth, unfulfilled devotion, and the sad splendor of finding wonderful light in someone who's blind to their own light. Musically speaking, SIENNÁ employs her voice as yet another piece of her orchestral ensemble and allows her voice to float high notes in the register over elaborate and symphonic electronic arrangements and sub-bass elements. It affects the listener with overwhelmingly beautiful sadness.

The sudden sensory shock,369(Miroku)”, disturbs the peace with its strong, low-pitch bass like sound , industrial distortion, and a high-frequency synth sound that invades the speakers. The track's theme is derived from the idea of Maitreya and spiritual metamorphosis; the lyrics compel the listener to forsake comfort, to accept the difficult inner change, and to destroy one's habits in order for true rebirth to take place. SIENNÁ mixes delicate and intense lyrics in the verses with explosive multi-layered choruses against the backdrop of crunchy electronic sounds, distorted bass synthesizers, and aggressive drum beats. The effect leaves the listener feeling charged with energy that breaks down the mental exhaustion and ignites an audacious determination to overcome oneself.

Liberated from the burden of industry, “Finding Inner Sanctuary” begins with an exhilarating, nostalgic synth arpeggio that bounces between the left and right channels above airy, breathing ambient pads. Musically, this song is a celebration of restoring peace within oneself, leaving behind all the distractions of the outside world and finding your way back to the calm, unmovable center within yourself. The vocals of SIENNÁ are soothing, gentle, and incredibly comforting as she glides gracefully through complex neoclassical synth loops and delicate digital piano keys. The result is a weightless arrangement in which instrumentation builds around her soothing vocals.

Grounded in a deep, echoing tribal drum pulse, subtle piano dissonance, and a low, rumbling synth drone, “The Majestic” immediately establishes a sense of vast physical scale. The song's lyrics explore the total surrender of the human ego when confronted by the vastness of the natural world and the cosmos, finding peace in our smallness within the universe. Vocally, SIENNÁ stacks descending vocal harmonies into grand, choir-like arrangements, setting them against primitive percussion hits, spacious piano chords, and low-end electronic orchestration. The track's massive sonic footprint impacts the listener with a feeling of expansive reverence, leaving you feeling small yet deeply connected to everything around you.

In the second to last song, “A Messenger,” starts off with an easygoing and retro electronic rhythm, a nice synthetic beat, and an observational vocal sampling that creates a mysterious and noirish mood. The song criticizes SIENNÁ combines the rhythmic and ethereal vocal samples of a dry nature with harmonious melodies in the background, supporting everything with a funky bass rhythm, vintage synths, and glitch effects.

To bring closure to the album experience, “From Here To Where You Are” begins with the natural sounds of water flowing through a stream, field recordings, and delicate notes of strings in a manner inspired by traditional Japanese music. The lyrical content is an affectionate look at how one may offer unconditional love despite time and distance, releasing oneself from any attachments, and returning the soul to its natural place among nature. In terms of the vocals performed by SIENNÁ, it is characterized by gentle breaths and harmonizes perfectly well with the natural sounds of water, traditional instruments, and ambient pads that breathe.

Ultimately, EMA is not just a music album, but a stunning series of nine image to sound transformations, created through the dialogue between the artist and nature itself. Crafted under the wide open skies, these tracks seem as if Sienná has captured the pure essence of nature's ambience and turned its beauty into sound with the precision of an artist. And with this album, Sienná pushes her artistry to bold new limits, weaving a spellbinding web that effortlessly blends cinematic scope, energetic drum and bass, ambient waves, glitch design, and even the spiritual beauty of Japanese classical music.

In the context of the current age where algorithms and clean compositions rule supreme, Sienná's persistence in working with non-linear structures becomes nothing short of heroic artistic resistance. It is a glorious ode to the “perfect imperfection” which can be brought into synthesized digital sounds by pure human emotions alone, the sublime balance which no algorithm or equation can even attempt to mimic.

“EMA”is precisely what my soul needed as palate cleansing at the current stage of my career in contemporary music. The distinctive character of Sienná's cross-continental origin and the naturalness of her artistic approach give her music a special style that makes her stand out from other musicians in a class of her own. Being able to see her grow and develop throughout her musical journey has been nothing short of a privilege, and while we keep moving forward along with the changes in this industry, I cannot help but admire her artistic vision.
