I love it when an album feels like a musical journey and reveals different facets that are truly rare to encounter in such variety. This is the new release 'Ema' by Sienná from Norway, which offers an innovative experimental sound with highly original synthesizer textures. Across its nine tracks, the atmospheric beauty is really hard to put into words.

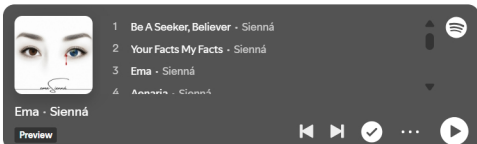

I especially enjoy the cinematic influences, which give the album an exciting, at times dark, but also harmonious character. The vocal passages stand out as well with slightly hazy, veiled and psychedelic layers. Each track you play feels like entering a completely new space that takes you into another, previously unknown environment. At times groovy, dreamy and smooth, and at other moments rhythmic with a disco feel, the individual arrangements bring a captivating vibe to the modern indie scene.

Moreover, I do not want to leave out the unmistakable traditional elements, which give us a slightly exotic feel along the way. If you're into it, I can only recommend following Sienná on Spotify to discover more:
