REVIEWS

Sienná's 'Be A Seeker, Believer' Pulls You Into Something Quiet and Deep

Sienná returns with 'Be A Seeker, Believer,' the lead single from EMA — a meditative downtempo track that layers chant-like vocals over warm synth pads and a steady electronic pulse.

BY MILES CARTER · September 29, 2026 · 3 min read

Photo provided by the Artist

Sienná's new single "Be A Seeker, Believer" opens with care, and I mean that as a compliment. The synth pads bloom outward, warm and wide, while the bass comes in like something pinning you to the floor while everything else drifts above it.

The vocals stack into a chant-like texture where you can't hear one single voice from the others, less a lead performance and more a harmonic fog you move through. It works on you without announcing itself.

Around 2:27, the beat drops out entirely. Just pads and voices for a moment... and then the kick and snare ease back in and the whole thing re-centers. I replayed that section twice.

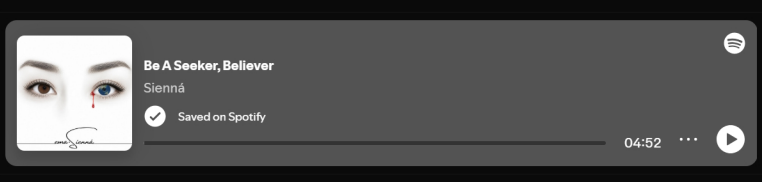

Pure stillness. Then motion again.

This is the lead single from EMA, Sienná's 7th album. Spacious, patient, built for repeated listening, if the rest of the record holds this kind of atmosphere, it demands the full sit-down.

WATCH

LISTEN

TAGGED SIENNÁ ELECTRONIC DOWNTEMPO AMBIENT EMA TRIP HOP

← BACK TO THE CAGE

MORE FROM REVIEWS

Flame's 'Naive' Arrives Raw, Driven, and Ready to Be Heard

BY MILES CARTER · Sep 29, 2026 · 3 min read

GlowDriver's 'Tell Me' Turns Emotional Need Into a Dancefloor Anthem

BY MILES CARTER · Sep 29, 2026 · 3 min read

004F's 'Homegrown' Is Cold, Mechanical, and Impossible to Shake

BY MILES CARTER · Sep 29, 2026 · 3 min read

©2025 Cage Riot Music Group. All rights reserved.